Wife's maintenance man's 'natural duty': Supreme Court

NEW DELHI, Nov 28

In a significant ruling, the Supreme Court has held that providing maintenance to his wife, children and parents is a natural duty of a man and a woman need not be a destitute to claim it from her husband.

The ruling was given Tuesday by a bench of Justice Arijit Pasayat and Justice Altamas Kabir that held that even a woman having an independent source of income is entitled to claim compensation from her former husband if she is not able to retain her living standards equivalent to those at her former husband's household.

The bench gave the ruling while upholding a Madhya Pradesh High Court ruling endorsing a lower court's verdict ordering a former state government official to pay Rs.1,500 a month to his divorced wife to maintain herself.

The Neemach court in state had ordered the state's former agricultural director Chaturbhuj to pay maintenance to his divorced wife dismissing his plea that she was having an independent source of income from the rent of the house that he had built for himself but was 'grabbed' by her.

The apex court bench said there was a social purpose behind Section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which entitles a divorced wife, minor children or old parents to claim maintenance from her husband, father or earning son, respectively.

'Section 125 gives effect to fundamental rights and natural duties of a man to provide maintenance to his wife, children and parents when they are unable to maintain themselves,' the bench said, adding 'It is meant to achieve a social purpose.'

Elaborating upon conditions that entitle a woman to seek maintenance from her former husband, the bench ruled: 'The expression 'unable to maintain herself' does not mean that the wife must be absolutely destitute before she can apply for maintenance under Section 125 of the CrPC.

'Where the personal income of the wife is insufficient, she can claim maintenance under Section 125 of CrPC. The test is whether the wife is in a position to maintain herself in the way she used to in the place of her husband,' the bench ruled.
